1.2 Scope of the Study

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Study Assumptions

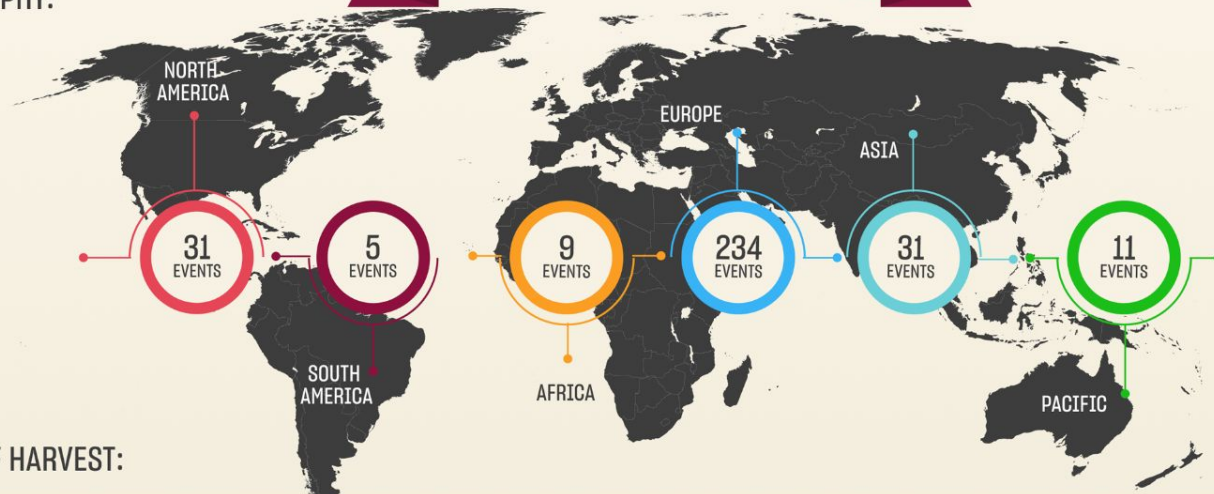

The report was generated based on the lists of awarded wines officially published by the organizers of wine competitions. Information received directly from the winemakers was used only as a verification material. In case of discrepancies between the information from the winemakers and from the organizers, the version of the latter was taken as the basis.

When calculating the Global Wine Medal Rating and further processing as part of the analytical report, medals received at events held no earlier than 2020 were taken into account. At the same time, the events of 2022 will not be reflected in the report and will be included in the study in 2023. This may cause difference between medal counts and GWMR scores shown in the report and the ones shown on GWMR website. The GWMR website keeps the medal information as up to date as possible.

Information about the awarded wines was taken from more than 250 of the largest wine competitions out of at least 600 held in the world every year. Priority was given to international competitions, while the results of national competitions were processed with lower priority. You can find the list of all competitions and events included in the database for generating the report in the Annexes section.

GLOBAL WINE MEDAL RATING METHODOLOGY

2.1 Introduction to GWMR

It would seem that there is a very large-scale source of reliable information on collegial and, more importantly, blind assessment of wines within the framework of representative samples of the best wines from many representative winemakers from different continents, countries and regions — awards and medals of significant international or national professional competitions.

Moreover, winemakers, distributors and wine merchants spend significant marketing budgets to participate in these competitions, highly appreciating potential results and clearly valuing received awards.

For more details please see the full article:

Global Wine Medal Rating \(GWMR\). An introduction

Nevertheless, collecting, structuring and analyzing information about wine awards at professional competitions is far from simple. That is exactly why at the moment there is not a single aggregated rating based on the medals of a wine.

When working on such a rating, we would have to take into account the following:

1

There is an enormous amount of information — more than a hundred thousand wines receive awards annually at more than 400 competitions.

2

The scale and significance of the competitions are very different. It is necessary to identify and calculate clear comparative parameters of competitions.

3

The titles of the award values vary from competition to competition, which is an additional task to systematize and grade them. Assessment ranges for medals of similar merit differ from competition to competition.

4

The very fact of receiving a certain medal does not indicate the exact assessment of the wine, but only the range within which this assessment fell.

2.2 Mathematical Approach

From the perspective of collecting the information necessary to calculate the rating of any wine that has received at least one award at professional wine competitions, the Gustos.Life team has launched several parallel processes:

- Complete cataloging of information about all professional competitions in the world.
- Manual collection of information on medals received by wines in order to quickly gather information necessary to calculate and set up the methodology.
- Systematic and consistent “automated” data collection on all medals of each individual competition.

Having promptly received basic information about the Moldovan medalists, we began to formulate a mathematical model for calculating the GWMR.

As a result, the problem of calculating the aggregated medal rating was reduced to two large tasks:

- Calculation of the Rating of the significance of competitions.
- Calculation of the Rating of a particular vintage, depending on the number and value of its medals, taking into account the rating of the significance of competitions.

We strongly urge all those interested to carefully study our mathematical model and, should there be any observations, clarifications and comments, be sure to inform us about them.

We are always open to a constructive dialogue and improvement of our mathematical model in the future. We just remind you that you should pay attention to the level of principles, formulas and coefficients, and not directly to the ratings, which are only dry results of algorithm processing.

2.3 Practical Application

After all, the medals awarded during professional wine competitions are an inexhaustible source of blind, comparative, and expert assessments of the quality of wine. But at the same time, no one had previously dared to undertake such a complex organizational and analytical task or at least, no one found a solution worth being published.

It deserves to address now the real practical applications of the GWRM:

1

For example, our ranking and medal database may enable wine sellers to boost company sales.

2

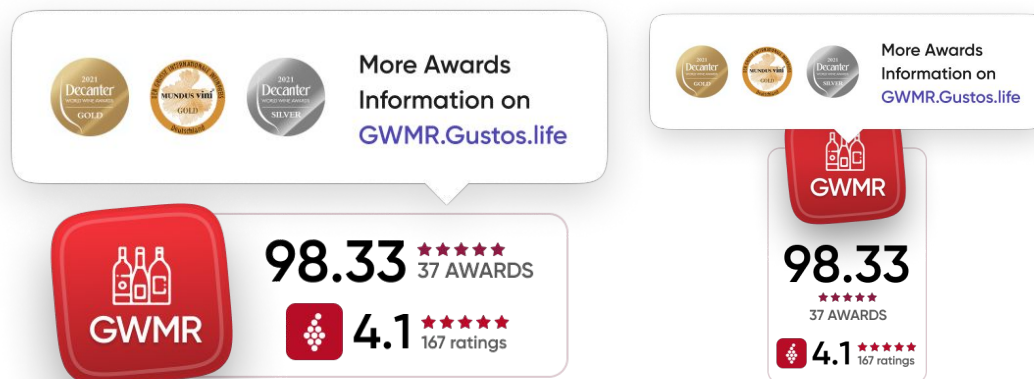

Or, by applying Big Data analysis, it may suggest to winemakers the optimal strategy for participating in certain professional competitions.

3

Or, it will show the consumer information about the best wines in the category of interest, especially in terms of price/quality ratio.

The simplest and most obvious application of the GWMR rating will be an easily implemented universal widget that allows any online site to upload information about wine rating and, at the same time, a complete list of medals this wine has received.

WINE INDUSTRY LANDSCAPE OVERVIEW

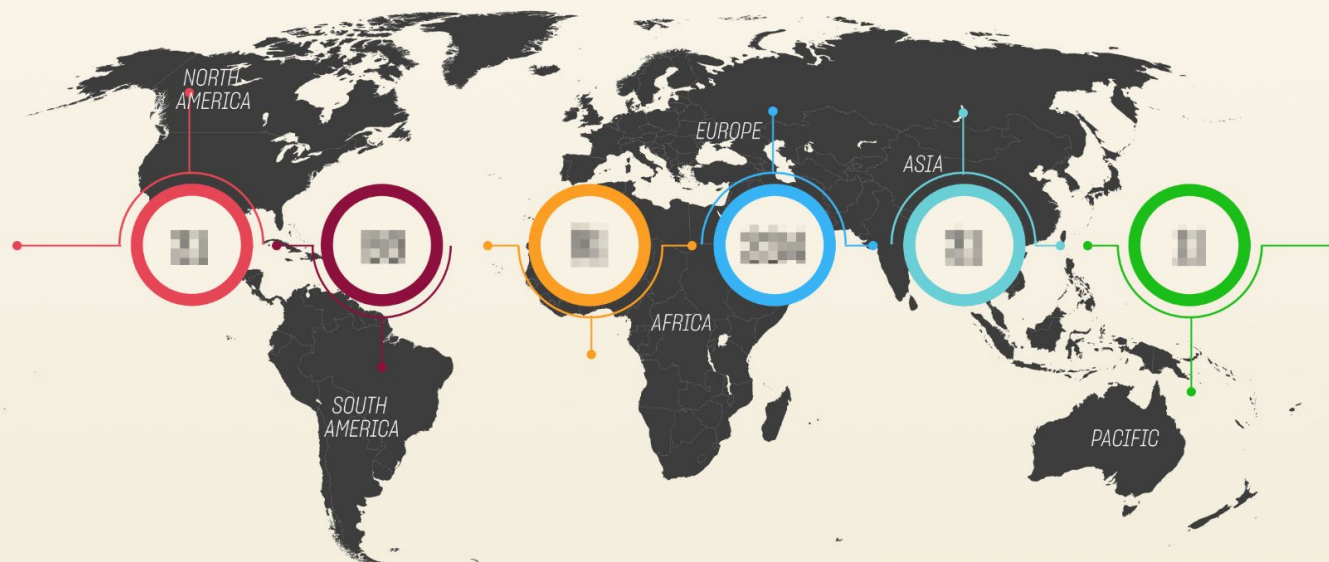

Among regions of the world, Europe is the clear leader in terms of the number of wine competitions and medals awarded. It is there that the most famous and famous international competitions are held. Also, in almost every country in Europe, both national and regional professional wine competitions take place.

If we compare the numbers of awarded wines by origin, the leader is [bar chart] followed by [bar chart]. This two region together produce 15% of the of the wines that are awarded Worldwide.

Global "Iconic wines" wines distribution

After analysing the medals awarded starting 2020 - only [redacted] aout of the total [redacted] wines received a GWMR score higher than 92 points. Their distribution by origin is again uneven. [redacted] Is a clear lider with [redacted] or 11% of the total number of "Iconic" wines in the World.

This figure shows the correlation between GWMR score and the competition rating. You can clearly see that

This figure shows the correlation between GWMR score and the number of received medals. Obviously

Considering the popularity, number yearly participating of samples and the amount of referral citation in the Internet GWMR calculates a personal rating of each competition. Later on this score affects the GWMR score of each wine that received medals in this specific competition. Here are the Top 5 competitions in the World. The list of all the competitions featured in the current version of the report you can find in the Annexes section.

More medals does not always give a better GWMR score. As you can see this chart is different from the previous one.

Some winemakers highly value participation in professional competitions and try hard to get as many awards as possible. Here you can see the top 5 most awarded wineries in Romania.

Not all winemakers can offer a wide range of wines that regularly receive competitive awards. Here you can see the top 5 best wineries by this parameter.
